"The Miniature Railway" became an added feature of the Prior and Church "Giant Dipper" on New Year's eve, and was very popular, as proved by the crowds of young folks.

HUNDREDS PLUNGE IN OLD OCEAN TOGETHER ON NEW YEAR'S DAY

On New Year's day a large crowd of spectators gathered to view the New Year's day swim for all bathers, inaugurated by the San Diego Rowing club. Prior to the dip, gymnastics, races and a war dance around a huge bonfire were staged. The bathers then stood in a group, and at a given signal, over 300 men, women and children dashed into the breakers, while overhead an airplane circled low, taking moving pictures of the scene. Later a white polo ball was dropped beyond the breakers, causing a general rush of swimmers to capture the ball. Hot coffee and hot dogs were free to everyone in a bathing suit. People who have not bathed in the ocean since last summer expressed great surprise at the warmth of the water, it being only about seven degrees colder than last summer.

Mr. Holly lives at 4744 Muir avenue and his phone number is Point Loma 0602-W. All stove and general heater repair work is guaranteed and his prices are reasonable. Give him a trial.

COMMUNITY PROPERTY LAW

DECLARED INVALID

BY SUPERIOR COURT

A news dispatch from Washington states that the California community property law has been held invalid by the supreme court, in deciding a test suit brought by the federal government against R. D. Robbins, Jr., San Francisco.

The case was based on the contention of California's community property income tax law, providing that a husband's income could be divided in two parts and that a tax on each part could be paid by the husband and wife individually, instead of one tax payment by the husband to cover the entire income.

Refunds to California citizens in event of a favorable decision by the supreme court would have amounted to approximately $100,000,000.

On this decision hangs the entire income tax refund controversy between California and the United States treasury department.

New Method That Controls Volume

Potentiometer Used on Secondary of Last Transformer Excels Jack.

In a number of the newer types of sets you will notice the absence of jacks for obtaining the different stages of volume.

Radio-set designers are making efforts to simplify the building and operation of their receivers, as well as increase their efficiency. The new method of volume control does away with the troublesome moving about of the plug and gives still finer adjustment of the tone and volume.

Not only does it make the set simpler to wire and operate, but actually helps to improve the tone.

Another good point about this control is that it protects the transformers, both from being burned out and from destructive voltages induced in the jack leads. A 500,000-ohm potentiometer is used across the secondary of the last audio transformer and negative filament. The best place to mount the potentiometer is on the panel, in such a position that the leads to the transformer and socket are as short as possible.

Diagram Showing Best Location for Resistance.

Connect it so that you have to turn the dial to the right to increase the volume. If your dial turns to the left to increase, reverse the outside wires. This resistance has been tried in many places, but the best place for it is as shown in the sketch.

Current Should Flow in Proper Direction

If you have a neutrodyne receiver or any receiver using a two-stage audio-frequency amplifier, the direct current from your "B" battery through the headset or loud-speaker is comparatively large. This is especially so if you are using a high plate voltage on your amplifier tubes. In fact the current drawn from the battery and flowing through the headset is likely to be so high that it will ultimately weaken the magnetism of the magnets in the headset, if the current is not flowing in the proper direction through the headset.

If flowing in the wrong direction the magnetic field set up in the coils of the headset is in the opposite direction to the field of the magnets themselves. These two fields tend to buck each other, and if this is allowed to go on very long the magnetism of the headset will be considerably weakened.

For this reason a number of headset manufacturers supply their headsets with cords whose two terminal wires have "tracer" wires in them. Usually the red tracer is standard. The other wire may have a green, white, yellow or brown tracer. The red tracer terminal should be connected toward the "B" battery and the other terminal toward the plate of the last tube. The tracer wire is a single strand (or several strands bunched together) woven into the braided cord. If your set has jacks for termination of the headset wires, and a plug on the headset or speaker, you will have to trace out the connections of the set to see which way the headset terminals are to be connected to the plug.

In general it is more or less standard to connect the bottom terminal of the jack (the frame of the jack itself) to the "B" battery and the upper spring to the plate. This calls for the red tracer of the headset being connected to the sleeve of the plug, which makes contact with the frame of the jack, and it is insulated by a small bushing from the tip, or round terminal at the end of the plug. The tip should be connected to the other tracer wire.

It is well worth while to have these connections properly poled. In addition to lengthening the life of the magnets in the headset in a number of cases with the correct polarity the magnets are actually strengthened and signals will be louder.

Should Use Voltmeter to Test Dry Batteries.

Now that the winter radio season is here it is time to see that everything concerned with your receiving set is in good condition. One of the first things to do is to have your batteries tested. This test should be made with a voltmeter, while the tubes are turned on. If dry-cell "A" batteries are used, each cell should test at least 1.1 volts. A 22½-volt dry "B" battery should test at least 17 volts, and a 45-volt dry "B" battery should test at least 34 volts.

Storage "B" batteries may be tested with a hydrometer, the same as storage "A" batteries.

Don't try to use an ammeter to test dry "B" batteries or any type of storage batteries. You will ruin the meter and you may also damage the battery.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

WHAT ABOUT NEXT YEAR?

WHAT kind of person shall I be next year?

Put that question to yourself; ask it seriously, repeatedly and with the determination of giving it an intelligent, workable answer.

It can do you no harm even if you fail to find a satisfactory reply.

When it comes up to you, don't shrug your shoulders, look the other way, or try to pass it by without a friendly nod and a hearty handshake. You have nothing to fear.

Ask it again; "What kind of person shall I be next year?"

Every day you are undergoing a physical and mental change.

You are improving or deteriorating. Time is acting imperceptibly on your bone and blood, on your sinew and mind. You are gaining or losing.

Life today is a preparation for the life of tomorrow, its new problems, changing form between every sunrise and sunset.

Present life is the pathway to future life in the process of making, with which you have much to do.

If you are going to be something worth while in the years that lie ahead, you would better begin today.

If you are cruel, vindictive, quarrelsome, tyrannical and neglectful to-day, the probabilities are that you will be the same tomorrow.

If you shirk duty this morning, the old gray-headed timekeeper tomorrow morning will mark you a "shirker."

WHO SAID

"I would rather obey than work miracles."

MARTIN LUTHER, the author of the words quoted above, who is known to history as one of the great religious reformers, was destined by his father to be a lawyer. He was deeply religious from his youth, however, and in 1505, contrary to his father's wishes, he entered the monastery at Erfurt, Germany.

Five years after his entrance into the monastery Luther made a pilgrimage to Rome. That pilgrimage had a great effect upon his later life. Many of those occupying high places in the established church in Rome were untrue to the high trust reposed in them as the heads of the church and their conduct changed Luther's attitude toward the Roman church. He wrote his celebrated ninety-five theses condemning the sale of indulgences, and the consequent action of the religious authorities in declaring them heretical drove Luther to still further activity.

Luther originally intended no separation from the established church. He wrote a modest letter to the pope seeking pardon and asking that several reforms be incorporated in the church law. This was followed by a bull excommunicating Luther and his friends. Aroused to passion, Luther publicly burned the bull of excommunication.

SEASONABLE FOODS

COOL evenings create the desire for hot dishes; for the evening meal, there is nothing more appetizing than a good, hot, well-seasoned potato soup. For the normal family who enjoys the wholesome onion the following will be a cherished recipe:

French Potato Soup.

Fry two or three medium-sized onions in two full tablespoons of butter for 15 minutes, without browning. Meanwhile cook three or four medium-sized potatoes until tender, add the boiling potato water to the onions and cook them a little longer, while mashing the potatoes, then add them; mix well and add a quart of hot milk, salt and pepper and another two tablespoons of butter. Serve piping hot with tiny cubes of bread browned in butter.

Potato Rolls.

To one cupful of hot mashed potato add one-half cupful of potato water, and one cupful of scalded milk, three tablespoons of sugar, one-fourth cupful of butter or a mixture of butter and other shortening, one egg and a yeast cake dissolved in a little lukewarm water; add flour to make a batter, which will stir well with a spoon. Set to rise and when light enough to knead add flour to mix and knead (as little flour as possible). Put to rise again and when light, cut down, cover and rise again, then make into finger rolls or place three small balls of the dough in well-greased pans; when very light bake in a quick oven.

Peach Cup.

Take eight canned peaches, two eggs, one-half cupful of milk, one and one-half cupfuls of flour, three teaspoons of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, and one teaspoonful of butter. Mash two of the peaches and add the beaten egg yolks of two eggs, then the milk and the dry ingredients, and the butter melted. Pour some of the mixture into a buttered custard cup, add half a peach, cover with batter, sprinkle the top with sugar and bake in a moderate oven 20 minutes. Serve with whipped cream or a hard sauce.

NOT JUST TODAY

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

NOT just today I wish you joy, And happiness, and cheer, But on the next day, and the next, And so through all the year, For life is long, the road is far, And many little bumps there are, And yet I hope a silver thread Runs all through all the days ahead.

Not just today I hope that friends Will gather 'round your fire, But all the year I wish you love And all that year I wish you joy, May every little walk you take Meet merry hearts, and hands to shake,

And friends to greet you now and then, At night when you come home again.

Not just today I wish you peace, And certainty, and song; I wish you all a friend can wish Today and all along.

Let New Year's day remind us of The folks around us we can love, Of things to do, and things to say, Through all the year—not just today.

munication and his severance from the established church was completed.

The reformation now spread throughout Germany and the power of the established church to curb Luther by means of bulls of excommunication was rendered useless. In his fight Luther was greatly aided by a powerful German prince whose protection saved him from punishment.

Among the NOTABLES

LOUIS XVI

LAST of the French kings before the Revolution, weak-willed and with no special desire and certainly no aptitude for statecraft—such was Louis XVI.

He was born August 23, 1754, at Versailles, grandson of Louis V, became heir to the throne when he was eleven, and was married at sixteen to Marie Antoinette in order to make more firm the peace between France and Austria. At first he did not care for his wife, but after a time, during which he had ascended the throne, he came considerably under her influence.

The young queen had reacted against her very strict bringing up, and was plunging recklessly into the dissipation and gaiety of the times. Politics were like a seething cauldron, then, bound to boil over; indeed it did boil over—into the Revolution of 1792. Marie Antoinette, by her extravagance and because she was Austrian (and there was a growing feeling against her country), became very unpopular. Louis, meantime, wanted nothing but to spend the days in hunting. Never bright mentally, he became more and more stupid and retiring as time passed.

The revolution came and the gayest court in the world was literally thrown into prison. Louis was condemned and guillotined early in 1793. One by one, the figures who make the tale of these courts so fascinating, were driven through the streets to their death—for the most part, going with dignity and a look of contempt for the rabble who had them in power. The queen herself was beheaded in 1793.

Cat Picks Car for Nursery

It is not only millionaire motorists who on returning to their unattended cars find them lightened of some of their contents, observes the London Post in "The Way of the World," column. Sometimes, however, it happens the other way round, and with equally embarrassing results.

"The other day," writes a correspondent, "I came across a man in a quiet suburban street contemplating his car with a puzzled air. He explained that he had left it by the curb for an hour or so and returned to find it in the possession of a cat which had chosen that part of the floor which is best warmed by the engine as a suitable place for bringing into the world a family of kittens."

Miss Mifflin's Hero

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(Copyright.)

MISS SARA MIFFLIN paused in the entrance to the moving-picture theater to reassure herself. Lionel DeWitt would play the leading part in the feature picture. Convinced of this, and smiling cordially at Mr. DeWitt's attractive picture and magnetic eyes, she sighed, and passed on to get her favorite seat in the center, not too far front, not under the balcony, but next to the aisle.

"I am so glad that it is a DeWitt picture," she told her companion, Mr. Watkins, who lived at the boarding house, and was a quiet, intelligent, likeable man of fifty with graying hair and nice eyes. He was a widower and Miss Mifflin was a spinster, and their fellow boarders had tried to make a match between them, but, as old Mrs. Beebe said peevishly:

"There's no use expecting Sara Mifflin's going to do the sensible thing and take up with Mr. Watkins, who is quiet, home-loving and respectable, even if he does smoke an occasional cigar, she won't encourage him a bit except go to the movies with him, all because she's just fascinated with that wild actor, Lionel DeWitt."

"I am so glad that it is a DeWitt picture," repeated Sara Mifflin as she removed her hat and fluffed up her soft brown hair and smiled up at Mr. Watkins. He smiled down at her.

"Miss Lansdowne is playing, too," he said in a satisfied way.

"Phyllis Lansdowne and Lionel DeWitt? What a combination!" she murmured wistfully, and perhaps a little enviously that lovely Miss Lansdowne should be playing opposite her idol.

"They are only pictured people on the screen," she said looking up at him, "but somehow they are so much alive to me."

"They would love to hear you say that," he told her with unaccustomed warmth.

"I suppose they have beautiful homes and families—and everything," mused Sara.

"Miss Lansdowne is happily married, I have heard, and I have also heard that DeWitt—that's his stage name of course—has been married but is a widower who would love to have a home and charming wife—but, perhaps, who can tell, perhaps the girl he loves doesn't love him! There you are!"

The orchestra was tuning up, and the manager came onto the stage and announced that Mr. Lionel DeWitt would appear in person that night and address a few words to the audience.

Sara Mifflin was starry-eyed. "I can hardly wait until after the picture is finished," she confided to Watkins, who appeared embarrassed enough by her open preference for another man.

The picture was on at last and Miss Mifflin sank back, wrapt in ecstatic silence. Once she unspun a lovely pink rosebud from her wrap and whispered: "How I would love to toss this at him when he comes on to speak—he has always given me so much pleasure."

"If you will let me take the rose," said her companion gently, "I will see that he receives it."

"Oh, thank you—and say, please, that it is from an admirer, but you needn't say it is from a woman," she ended flutteringly.

The story of the picture was interesting. There was Lionel DeWitt as a young man going away on some far expedition for science—he takes farewell of his small family, his friends, and departs. He is lost in strange countries, captured and held prisoner for years by savage tribes, and at last returns home to find that his wife believes he is dead and has married again. Somehow it all works out to everybody's happiness, and the rose shows husband and wife, looking into each other's eyes with steadfast faith. When the picture faded out to well-earned applause, Sara Mifflin turned to find that Mr. Watkins had disappeared.

"Gone to give him the rose," she thought gratefully.

The screen star was announced, the lights went up and Sara Mifflin craned her still pretty neck to see if he wore her rose.

He did! He also wore Mr. Watkins' handsome gray suit and his eyeglasses with the dangling black cord, and he had, also, Mr. Watkins' face and his nice smile and his deep thrilling voice.

"I never dreamed that was Lionel DeWitt sitting in front of me," whispered a young girl in back of Sara. "Excuse me, but are you Mrs. DeWitt?"

"No," whispered Sara happily, and turned her tear-filled eyes to the stage. He was bowing gracefully and leaving, soon he would be sitting beside her! What could she say to him?

He disappeared in a thunder of applause, and the lights went down. A comedy was thrown on the screen, and Sara Mifflin sat stiffly, never seeing a thing. At last she knew that he was beside her.

He leaned over so closely that she could smell the fragrance of her rose in his lapel. "Sara," he whispered, seeking her hand, "will you forgive the deception?"

Somehow, Sara's annoyance melted before the warmth in his voice. She felt the depth of the man's regard, his sincerity, his uprightness, and was not her hero under any name?

"I love you, Sara," he murmured in her ear, and then her warm little hand slipped into his and remained there always.

LEAPS TO DEATH AS SWEETHEART PROTESTS LOVE

Despondent Woman Takes Fatal Plunge From Roof of Tall Building.

New York.—Wanda Iwaska, twenty, an unwed mother, jumped to her death from the roof of a building in Brooklyn.

She leaped as her sweetheart, calling "Wanda, I love you!" tried to grasp her shoulders.

He still was calling her name as her body thudded on the street.

It was the end of a tragic love story. Wanda was only fifteen when she became a mother, a pretty brunette, ignorant, romantic, duped. She disappeared with her baby, Anna May. And her parents and the neighborhood of Twenty-third street and Second avenue knew her no more.

A year ago Wanda as Mrs. Bertha Setter, "widow," rented a room for herself and her child at the home of Oriel Brannan, twenty-two, in Brooklyn.

There she found peace. Mrs. Brannan, Oriel's mother, took care of Anna May while Wanda and Oriel worked in the factory. They labored side by side.

Girl Finds Peace.

They loved each other. They planned to marry. The girl said nothing about her past. She hoped Oriel never would know the truth. She feared what it would mean to him.

And then, two months ago, the first man "came back." He met Wanda on the street. He followed her to her refuge. He made her life miserable, speaking of "his daughter."

Wanda kept to her room. Oriel could hear her weeping in the night. She could not tell him—not at first.

Jumped to Her Death.

But last week he forced the story from her. He said nothing, but went to see her parents.

He wanted them to know that Wanda was alive and well and their little granddaughter was strong and sweet and happy. He wanted to arrange a marriage.

Man Is Shunned.

But he didn't tell Wanda about this. He didn't get much chance, for Wanda, being afraid, shunned him.

The other morning she locked herself in her room and gave way to weeping. Brannan remained in his own room, thinking it best to leave her alone. He heard her enter the bathroom. And a moment later he heard her scream.

She had swallowed iodine, but he didn't know that then.

She ran upstairs, while little Anna May wept bitterly. And Oriel followed, frantic.

She was flying toward the rim of the roof.

"Wanda, I love you!"

She was perched on the rim, ready to jump. He was running toward her.

"Wanda, for God's sake, Wanda—marry me!"

His hands reached out for her. They almost reached her.

But she had jumped, her hands in front of her tear-wet eyes.

Button Taken From Child's Throat on Speeding Train

Cincinnati.—Removal of a three-cornered button from the windpipe of a five-year-old West Virginia girl while on board a Baltimore & Ohio railroad train coming into Cincinnati marked the successful termination of a race with death begun at Parkersburg.

The child was Ellene Leven Sennett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Sennett of Harrisville, W. Va.

Cuts Wire, Saves Man

Hamburg, Pa.—Deliberately cutting a wire with a voltage of 2,300, which Paul Reppert, aged thirty-seven, touched accidentally, Harry Hummel, a fellow workman, caused the former to fall from an electric pole a distance of 35 feet and saved his life. In falling Reppert struck a wire reel. He escaped with a burned left hand.

THE LIONS' DEN

The lions were roaring.

Their great voices could be heard far, far away, and the sky was growing very black and full of heavy, dark clouds.

"What can be the trouble with the lions?" the people at the zoo wondered.

There were many visitors at the zoo that day and they all flocked to the lions' dens.

Still the roaring kept up and it looked as though any minute it might stop.

"These lions," the keeper said, as the roars continued and it began to storm, "would fight each other if I let them out."

"But they are roaring now to warn each other that danger is near."

"Lions hate a storm. They cannot stand bad weather. They are like some people in that way."

"But though they would fight if they were put into the same cage, they always call to each other when a storm is approaching.

His Mane Was Very Long.

"That is the meaning of their great roars now."

"When they are free they always get together when a storm is coming, and through the jungles they call to the missing ones."

"They do the same thing when night is coming on, and it is growing dark, both here and in the jungle."

"They never forget this habit."

"Come to safety, come to safety," roared the lions, but the people thought they were roaring:

"Let us kill, and kill and kill! We feel so angry!"

The people did not understand the lions as well as they might.

At last the storm was over and King Lion was admiring his mane.

He was five years old and so his mane was very long. A lion, you know, is not full-grown until that age.

Mrs. Lion was with her cubs. They were very, very young. In fact, they had just come into the great zoo world.

"I'm so nervous," said Mrs. Lion, "and I feel so wild. Here, you little cubs, you're nearer to me than anything else, I'll just kill you, for I must kill. I simply must."

And she did!

"Roar, ha, ha, ro-a-r," said Miss Lioness.

"I was jealous of those little cubs, but their own mother has killed them."

"Well," said King Lion, "I hate cubs."

"But I just am kept away from them until they become old and sensible when I like them."

"But for Mrs. Lion to kill her children—dear me, it was quite a wild thing to do."

"Really, she is a wicked lioness."

There was great excitement in the zoo. The keeper was terribly upset.

He was far more upset than Mrs. Lion.

But after a time she became very unhappy, too.

"I felt so sick," she was trying to say, "and so very nervous, that I couldn't help it."

"Next time I have little cubs I won't do such a thing. I never meant to do so dreadful a deed."

For though the lioness is wilder than the lion, it is very, very unusual for her to kill her cubs.

It was only because she became so upset and so nervous and felt so ill at ease in the zoo that she did such a dreadful thing.

She was terribly sad about it but she tried to look ahead to the time when she would have more little cubs and when she would love them as a mother lioness can love her little ones.

Wanted, a Husband

Edward was called in from play to get dressed for a party.

Soon after, two playmates rapped at the door and asked: "Where is Edward?"

They were told he was going to a party.

After thinking it over one little girl said: "Couldn't he come out for a while?"

I said: "What do you want with him?"

"Oh, we'd like to use him for a husband this afternoon."

Caught Unawares

Madeline wore a brand new coat to school and the first day fell into a mud puddle.

Telling her aunt about it when she got home, aunt exclaimed: "Oh, Madeline, with your new coat on!"

Whereupon Madeline indignantly replied: "Well, I didn't have time to take it off."

WHAT PRICE

VALUE of health may not be reckoned in dollars and cents. Two thousand years ago there was perhaps some excuse for the gastronome, but today there is none. The way to health lies in a balanced diet. Hippocrates, the father of medicine, figured along the same lines back 450 B. C. He expressed the belief that the science of medicine had its beginning in the efforts of men and women to find better and smoother diets.

Diet in the home today is becoming a matter of premier consideration. Women are taking cognizance of those important food elements known as vitamins. They have learned, also, the benefit to the human body of such minerals as iron, calcium and phosphorus.

This knowledge has resulted in the housewife planning her menus with an eye open to dietary values, which is the big reason why milk has assumed such a large place in the menu of the American family. Milk contains every structural element for body building. It is an almost perfect food. Despite the best refrigeration facilities, milk will keep sweet only a short time. Millions of American housewives have solved this big problem by using evaporated milk, which is simply fresh cow's milk sterilized in cans to achieve keeping qualities and with sixty per cent of the water removed. Evaporated milk is not the same as condensed milk, although many persons confuse the two. The condensed product is a combination of milk and sugar cane in a two-fifth cane sugar and three-fifth milk proportion. Evaporated milk has nothing but water taken from it and nothing at all added. Sugar is the preservative used in manufacturing the condensed product, while heat only is the preservative for evaporated milk. For this reason the evaporated product may be used in any way in which market milk is used.

Be a Milk Tippler, Says Dr. Schireson

Peaches and cream complexions of American women have their foundation in a milk diet, according to Dr. Henry J. Schireson, famous Chicago dermatologist and facial plastic surgeon.

Doctor Schireson has won fame by beautifying motion picture, musical comedy and vaudeville stars and many society women of America. He transformed Fanny Brice's nose, rejuvenated Eva Tanguay's face, removed sixty-four pounds of adipose tissue from Truly Shattuck in one operation, straightened the cross eyes of the leading lady of Singer's midwinters, and has performed other corrections for making people young and beautiful.

Doctor Schireson has one infallible prescription for the attainment of beauty. It is: "One quart of milk a day, one hour of sunshine, and repeat ad libitum."

"Beauty specialists and cosmetic makers," says Doctor Schireson, "would be driven out of business in a few weeks if all the women of America would drink their quart of milk a day."

"Babies and children have complexions of angels for the reason that they are fed largely on milk. Milk used externally or internally is a beautifier. Anna Held, I believe, was the first actress who adopted the milk bath. While this was a novelty at the time, and her press agent undoubtedly made the most of it, the principle in itself was sound. But a beauty secret of even more value is the daily quart of milk taken as a part of the diet."

"The milk-fed girl is easily distinguished by the velvety texture and the healthy color of her skin. Milk is a wonderful body builder, because it contains every structural element. It is, in a way, an elixir of life."

"Authorities agree that milk is the most nearly perfect food but it is an extremely delicate one as well. Heat sufficient to kill all bacteria is the essential of absolutely pure and sterile milk. One of the advantages of evaporated milk, which is simply fresh cow's milk with sixty per cent of the water removed, is that it is entirely sterile and is more easily assimilated than ordinary market milk."

"Milk is mentioned forty-seven times in the Bible. The Promised Land of the Israelites was said to flow 'with milk and honey' and Ovid graded milk as second only to nectar, the drink of the gods."

Fudge Making Finds Favor With Co-Eds

Fudge may be classed with pie as a typical American dish. It has a place

Meta H. Given.

In every young man's heart and every girl's category of accomplishments. Co-eds swear by fudge and "fudge shines" in sorority parlors are the very latest wrinkle in collegiate circles.

There's a big wallop in a platter of fudge, the co-eds explain, because it's one of the greatest sources of energy, containing both milk, the "perfect food," and sugar.

If you've any doubt of the place fudge occupies in the young male heart, try these recipes on him and hear his own answer. Each of the appended dishes was prepared by Miss Meta Given, doing research work in the home economics department of the University of Chicago, and they are the result of much experimentation.

Chocolate Fudge.

2 cups sugar 2 squares chocolate
1/2 cup evaporated milk
1/2 cup water 1 tsp. butter
1 tsp. corn sirup 1/2 tsp. vanilla

Shave the chocolate so that it will melt more easily. Add the sugar, salt, milk, water and corn sirup. Cook, stirring until chocolate and sugar are melted, and then only occasionally to prevent burning, until the soft ball stage is reached, or a temperature of 234 degrees Fahrenheit. Remove from fire and add the butter. Cool until almost lukewarm, 110 degrees, add flavoring and beat vigorously until when a little is dropped from the spoon it will hold its shape. Pour into oiled tins and mark in squares.

Cocoanut Candy.

1/2 cup sugar 1 tsp. butter
1/2 cup evaporated milk 1-2 cups shredded cocoanut
1/2 cup water 1/2 tsp. vanilla

Put butter into granite saucepan; when melted, add sugar, milk and water, and stir until sugar is dissolved. Heat to boiling, and cook to the soft ball stage. Remove from fire, add cocoanut and vanilla, cool to 110 degrees Fahrenheit and beat until creamy and mixture begins to sugar slightly around edge of pan. Pour into buttered pan and when cool mark in squares.

Peanut.

2 cups brown or maple sugar 1 tsp. butter
1/2 cup evaporated milk 2 cups chopped nuts
1/2 cup water

Boil sugar, milk and water to the soft ball stage. Remove from the fire; add butter, flavoring and nuts. Cool to 110 degrees Fahrenheit, then beat until creamy and thickened; pour into a greased tin and when firm cut.

The cow is a female quadruped with an alto voice and a countenance in which there is no guile. She collaborates with the pump in the production of a liquid called milk, provides the filler for hash, and at last is skinned by those she has benefited, as mortals commonly are.

The young cow is called a calf, and is used in the manufacture of chicken salad.

The cow's tail is mounted aft and has a universal joint. It is used to disturb marauding flies, and the tassel on the end has unique educational value. Persons who milk cows and come often in contact with the tassel have vocabularies of peculiar and impressive force.

The cow has two stomachs. The one on the ground floor is used as a warehouse and has no other function. When this one is filled the cow retires to a quiet place, where her ill manners will occasion no comment, and devotes herself to belching. The raw materials thus conveyed for the second time to the interior of her face is pulverized and delivered into the auxiliary stomach, where it is converted into cow.

The cow has no upper plate. All of her teeth are parked in the lower part of her face. This arrangement was perfected by an efficiency expert to keep her from gumming things up, for as a result she bites up and gums down.

The male cow is called a bull and is lassoed along the Colorado, fought south of the Rio Grande and shot in the vicinity of the Potomac.

A slice of cow is worth 8 cents in the cow, 14 cents in the hands of packers, and $2.40 in a restaurant that specializes in atmosphere.—The Baltimore Sun.

EDITORIAL

The New Year opens with the brightest prospects for agricultural and industrial activity and prosperity that our nation has witnessed in many years. It should be the endeavor of every citizen to help maintain this sound condition.

GAS—THE MODERN FUEL

Accurate cost accounting has shown that gas is the most satisfactory, efficient and economical source of heat. It enables manufacturers to turn out their products at lower cost or better products at the same cost as before.

The future increase of gas for heating is beyond comprehension, for every day it is being realized that it is the cost of using fuel, not the price of the raw fuel, which determines its ultimate cost. Gas is the cleanest, most easily controlled and most flexible source of heat known.

ONLY A RAGGED SHIRT

BUT GOT RESULTS BY

KEEPING IT WAVING

Every business man in San Diego county knows the story of Robinson Crusoe, how he was stranded on an island with only a goat, a parrot and a black man as his companions, and how badly he wanted to get off that island.

But most of them do not know that it was advertising that got him off.

He had only a ragged shirt with which to do his advertising, but he stuck it on a pole, planted the pole in the ground and waited.

He didn't get discouraged when no one came the first day—no good advertiser does.

But he kept advertising his predicament of that old shirt waving in the air—and finally he got results.

If Robinson Crusoe with one old shirt could reach the people he sought, how much more easy is it for merchants to reach the people in this territory through the columns of a modern, wide-awake newspaper like "The Beach News." Think it over!

A copy of the convention journal of the Los Angeles diocese, the "Spirit of Missions," "Living Church," a book of Common Prayer, the Bible, a copy of "The Beach News" and a list of names of original members of Trinity Mission were placed in the cornerstone, which was duly sealed and bears a suitable inscription with date of construction.

GUESTS AND GAYETY AT
ALLIGATOR ROCK LODGE
DURING THE HOLIDAYS

Written for "The Beach News" by
Maud M. Stuart

The Christmas and New Year festivities at Alligator Rock Lodge were unprecedentedly gay. Many parties were given and nearly one hundred and fifty guests came and went during the holidays, after enjoying an excellent dinner amidst the delightful surroundings overlooking the sea. All decorations were in harmony with the season, and under the new management of Mrs. W. W. Burch a joyous spirit pervaded.

Mah Jongg Luncheon

Miss S. E. Reed, of San Diego, entertained a party of thirteen young girls. Their large, round table was prettily decorated with sweet peas. After luncheon mah jongg was enjoyed until 5 o'clock.

Sunday School Party

A special party was given by Miss Mary Cowl, of San Diego, or twelve members of her Sunday school class. The porch was filled with laughter and gayety at the luncheon served there, and games were afterward played in the new tea pavilion in the lodge garden. This new building lends itself well to amusements and afternoon teas, and a little later will be equipped for dancing.

Beachites Entertain

It is pleasing to note that many residents of Ocean Beach have expressed their appreciation at having so near at hand a very pleasant place to entertain their friends. Among those who have already availed themselves of this privilege are Mr. and Mrs. Wise, of the Coronado bungalows; Miss Martha Hamilton, residing in one of the apartments at the Lodge; Mrs. Agnes McLaughlin, formerly of British Columbia, entertained as her guests Mr. and Mrs. Cameron and Miss Morrison, of Ocean Beach; and on New Year's day the Rev. George Wallace and wife entertained as their guest Bishop McKim, head of the mission field in Tokio, Japan; Dr. and Mrs. Wilson, with two children, motored from Pasadena, spending the night at the Lodge. They expressed themselves as so well pleased that they expect later to rent a cottage in the grounds.

San Diego Guests

Among others who dined were the following from San Diego: Captain and Mrs. H. J. Humphrey, with party of five; Mr. and Mrs. George L. Putnam; Mr. T. W. O'Donnell, with four others; Mrs. P. D. Sutphen, party of four; Mr. and Mrs. D. Thomas, with three; Mrs. K. L. MICKIE, THE PRINTER'S DEVIL

THE KEEN-EDGED KNIFE

BELOW were the gray depths that lay slumbering and mysterious beyond the cliff's ragged edge. Above was the clear, calm, interminable blue. Cuma Ventura crouched in the warm sand, leaning her head against the rough rock at her side. Behind her were thick short cactus bushes growing in scattered clumps and back of these the sides of the mountain rose, steep, jagged and barren. The rock was warm against her cheek though the sun was an hour below the Gaudalope peaks and the cactus shadows were growing darker on the long slopes. The air seemed heavy with silence. No bird sang. A vinegerone slipped under a stone at the edge of the cliff.

The girl sat quietly, her head bowed. The heavy, dark braids were bound with bands of glittering beads. Away in the distance sounded the faint tinkle of sheep-bells and the dull barking of a dog. At these sounds the girl raised her head. She snatched from her neck a small round locket, stared at the trinket a moment as it lay in her hand, and then flung it over the cliff into the chasm below. Her slim brown face was flushed; her eyes were large with pain but there were no tears in them.

"So it meant not anything to him—nothing," she muttered. The truth was slowly becoming real to her and it came with the weight of death itself. It was hard to believe after the beautiful dreams, so hard. There would be nothing more to be happy about. She would have to marry Petro as her father wished. Duño, her pony, and the new saddle would be his. He would beat the little Duro and her, too, he would beat her of course when he was jealous and angry.

At the thought of the ugly Mexican suitor her face broke into quick angry frowns. She pulled her long braids over her shoulders. Pierre had patted them once as she rode beside him and she had blushed foolishly. She hated herself for those blushes. And when his hand had chanced to touch hers on the saddle-horn, or when he had leaned over her, helping her to read the English books, she had trembled with a new and delicious joy.

She had taught him to know the desert and the mountains. He was often reckless in his ignorance. Once with her lips she had drawn the blood from a rattlesnake bite on his arm and Pierre had called her a brave little nurse. They had ridden for hours, for days together under the open sky. Often they had sat here among the rocks before the cliff. He had called it "the edge of the world." Once when she stood very near the perilous brink, he had caught her back suddenly, tenderly, and her head had rested for a moment on his shoulder. Together they had felt the twilight come. She had listened to his talk of his own people, of the cold winters, the snow, the sleighing, and the strange noisy cities. She had listened with her heart beating fast, her eyes upon his face and her ears filled with the music of his voice. They had seen the stars come into the deep dark sky and had watched the blue and purple shadows that cling along the "edge of the world" after sunset. Once a mountain lion had crept upon them and Pierre had shot the creature with her gun. He was careless about weapons himself, and often went unarmed even after nightfall.

Then he had gone away. His letter came explaining his hasty leaving. He would come back soon. How she wept over the letter, and the desolate loneliness that came with his absence. But he would come back, and she waited. She had borne her father's scolding and Petro's hateful presence, and she had been happy through it all. Now the thought of her happiness was more bitter than the memory of her misery. He had come back and it meant nothing to him. He had played with her and then cast her aside, as she would gather a yellow poppy in the mountains and throw it away, thirsty and helpless, on the hot sand. The girl's breast heaved, her eyes glowed, little points of light scintillating in their still depths. She knitted her low dark brows and pulled the small silver-handled knife from her belt.

"He shall not go back," she said softly. Her fingers stole along the sharp blade, testing its keen edge, and her lips parted in a cunning smile. It was the kind of smile that often flashed across old Diego's heavy lips. Cuma had hated her father for that smile. Once he had stabbed a half-breed cow-puncher because the man refused to trade ponies with him, and Cuma watched the wretch reel from his saddle, cursing. She had forgotten the ugly horror of it now and remembered only the quick, soft thrust of the knife.

"He shall not go," she repeated. She sprang to her feet with a swift, easy grace. She was strong and supple and closely knit. Her slender, bounded figure was as full of life as an antelope's. It was this abounding vigor that had attracted the man she had grown to love. It had held him in spite of the difference in their breeding. Sometimes its grip was stronger than the call of generations of civilization and environment. She was so simply and so wholly a woman. And her mind was ready, eager to follow his. Sometimes he had wondered if she might not learn his way of life, but that was only when he had grown delirious with the sense of her. When he weighed the matter in soberer moments he knew that this was impossible, that it would mean his coming to her level in the end.

Upon his return to the plains he had steeled his heart against her and she had felt the change in her first keen look. The desert wildness had not robbed her of the subtle intuitions of her sex. He did not see the fires of her hate. She hid them under the heavy-lashed eyelids, and she stifled the hot pain in her breast. But the fires of her hate were burning and the pain in her breast was not dead. Twilight was creeping up the long valley and the girl's figure was blurred against the dull background.

"He shall not go," she said again and gazed over the edge of the cliff where the tiny gold locket had gone.

Then suddenly she stood erect listening. There was the quick, soft step of padded feet among the cactus bushes, a rustle, and a low growl that sent a chill through the girl's warm veins. She sprang to her feet, lithe, quick-eyed and alert. There was no mistaking the sound. It was a panther. She felt in anticipation the sudden crushing of mouth and claws upon her, and every muscle was nerved for resistance. But the beast seemed to be parrying an assault, and she peered into the cactus jungle at her back. Through the branches of a dwarf saguara she caught sight of a long, tense body crouched close above the ground. She watched it stealthily out of the tail of her eye. It was creeping forward with a sneaking, cat-like movement, but it was not coming directly toward her. The girl's head turned, following the animal's advance, but her body was still like the stiff, motionless cactus beside her. Her fingers tightened their grip on the knife and the breath came noiselessly through her parted lips. In a flash her mind took in every detail of the situation, the yawning chasm a few feet in front of her, the ragged mountain at her back, and the crouching beast advancing stealthily over the sand. All the fierceness and cunning of the desert-born animal was reflected in the tense suppleness of her pose. Only one thing puzzled her, and that was the direction of the panther's advance. She was losing the yellow form in the deeper bushes at her back. Suddenly there was a softening and snapping in the shadows, a man's low curse and the ripping of the panther's claws against coarse clothing. In a moment two bodies rolled struggling on the ground beside the girl. She saw the man's arms tense and knotted against the beast's shaggy breast. She saw his brown hair.

"Pierre, Pierre," she cried, breathlessly. He, too, had been lingering at the old trysting place.

The claws were buried in the man's shoulders, the grinning mouth was reaching for his throat, but the brown arms with their rigid muscles held the creature back. The man's strength was being tested to the utmost. His body swayed above the brute's. His hands clutched the straining neck. They came nearer, almost against the girl's feet. She saw the man's arms bloody with cuts and scratches, his face white, his teeth set; she could hear his hoarse breathing. As they turned toward her she plunged the knife into the panther's taut, yellow throat.

The angered beast whirled about suddenly, dropped the man's shoulders and sprang upon his new enemy. The girl crumpled under his weight, the knife fell, her hands clutched blindly at the open jaws. The man jumped to his feet. The panther leaped forward against the girl's body and the two, struggling together, lurched over the cliff's edge and disappeared. The man flung himself on the ground and calling wildly, leaned far over the inscrutable depths.

But the girl did not answer. Her last glimpse of the world was a confused blur, the jagged cliff's edge and the sky's dull crimson whirling madly, and then the blue and purple depths rushing upward as her feet left the earth. And on the sand at the rock's edge the silver-handled knife lay dusty and blood-stained.

Homing Pigeons Not Guided by Instinct

It is popularly believed that a homing pigeon is able to find its way home from any distance merely by exercising this mysterious something called instinct. Nothing could be farther from the truth. A young pigeon might love his home better than his life, but he could no more find his way back to his loft from a distance of 300 miles if before being taken to that point he had not learned some intervening landmarks, than could an aviator, without perfect mechanical instruments and maps, find his way from New York to San Francisco.

Homing pigeons return to their lofts, says Jack O'Donnell, in the Saturday Evening Post, primarily because their loft represents love, food, warmth, kindness and comfort. It's home and they are homing pigeons.

Mr. O'Donnell cites instances to prove that it is memory and knowledge of the country, rather than instinct, that takes the birds back to their homes.

CHARMING DAY-TIME FROCKS; VELVET FOR THE CHILDREN

IN FEATURING crepe satin fashion creators take occasion to remind us that "there are two sides to a question." This continued popularity of two-faced satin is merited. A material, which, being reversed, forms its own trimming, could not but win its way to the top in the world of fashion.

With the coming of the gay winter season, crepe satin is in a very colorful mood. Time was when the all-black crepe-back satin frock was the center of attention, and he it here emphasized that it is still a favorite for practical wear. However, the program is being varied with the advent of fascinating frocks and ensembles of are two outstanding style features in this model.

Velvet is the fashion for children's frocks. Paris says so. Gayly trimmed are these juvenile velvet costumes. Some of them are strewn with cunning bouquets of little flowers done in brightest wool stitchery, to accent the childish note. Others, like the straightlined smock-like frock in the picture to the left, flaunt scarves and trimming of colorful printed silk. This picturesque little dress is distinctly Parisian.

The favorite shades for the velvet costume are black, navy and brown, their somberness offset by cheerful details. Answering to the demands of navy blue satin crepes. These are very handsome, especially expressed in terms of an ensemble, wherein the long coat is made with the dull-surfaced side out. While there is a predominance of navy and black there are indications that the new wine shades, gracklehead blue and amber satin frocks will register among fashion's newest numbers. The method of procedure, when it comes to high colors, is to use the dull side for the garment proper, applying the luster effect for borders and trappings.

An effective treatment was noted in a long navy satin coat in a recent style show, which gives a clue to com-

A navy dress was embellished with collar and cuffs of red crepe de chine and correspondingly bright yarn embroidery.

Sometimes the silk crepe takes the form of plating on the velvet frock as defined in the handsome dress to the right in the picture. It is interesting to note that the sleeves are long and close fitting, following the trend of a vogue which applies to children's frocks as well as those of their elders.

Clever manipulation of crepe satin imparts chic to the frocks here pictured. Note the tendency to mold the lines to the hips in the dress to the right.

USE COTTON MATERIALS IN VARIOUS WAYS

How Many Women Are Good Judges of Cotton Fabrics?

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Did you know that velvet, corduroy and India linen are all cotton materials, in spite of their trade names or their appearance? That there are almost a hundred common cotton materials women use in different ways for family clothing or household purposes? Do you know the difference between spun and reeled silk, worsted and woolen, satin and sateen? That although we instinctively look for goods that are "all wool and a yard wide," such material as part-cotton serge may give very good service considering its cost? That paper "yarn" is found occasionally in fabrics, combined with cotton, wool, or even silk fabrics?

The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture in its textile division is studying a great many such questions with a view to aiding the housewife in the selection of the materials for her family needs. Women ought to know more about the various kinds of fibers in each sort of material, the best materials for any given purpose, and how to make simple tests for durability and quality in each case. A cheap fiber is not necessarily a poor investment if the purchaser knows what she is getting, if it suits her purpose, and if the price is what it is worth.

FILL COOKIE JAR FOR THE HOLIDAYS

Supply of Sweet Cakes Is Valuable Asset.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

As the Christmas holidays draw near, a supply of cookies, kept in airtight tins or jars, is a valuable asset to the housekeeper. Perhaps she has boys and girls coming home from boarding school or college, with seemingly insatiable appetites and glowing recollections of the good things mother makes; or the holiday season brings unexpected callers, and visitors from a distance; or there is need for a few last-minute Christmas remembrances, which may well take the form of a box or fancy basket of delicious homemade cookies.

Peanuts or other nuts, chopped or whole, dates, raisins, figs, or frostings of various kinds may be used to modify the recipes given below by the United States Department of Agriculture. The chopped nuts and dried fruits may be mixed with the dough or pressed into the tops of the cookies after they have been cut out. The amounts used depend on individual preferences.

"Just One More Cookie, Grandma, Please."

Drop Cookies.

1/2 cupful milk or 1/2 teaspoonful less salt
4 cupfuls sifted soft wheat flour
or 3 1/2 cupfuls sifted hard wheat flour
1 cupful fat (see preceding recipe)

4 teaspoonfuls baking powder
1 1/2 cupfuls sugar
1/2 teaspoonful salt
3 teaspoonfuls flavoring

The fat may be any mild-flavored edible fat. The quantity given is for lard or other fat containing no water. If butter or margarine is used one-sixth more fat or two tablespoonfuls will be required. Place the fat in a warm place until it becomes soft, though not melted, so that it may be combined easily with the sugar. This is just as satisfactory and much quicker than the laborious method of creaming together the cold fat and sugar. After the fat and sugar have been thoroughly combined stir in the beaten egg yolks and add alternately the dry ingredients, which have been mixed and sifted together, and the liquid. At the start add only a small quantity of liquid. (If too much is added, it dissolves the sugar, and the fat separates into large masses that must be recombined with the other ingredients by beating, thus making needless the work of combining the fat and sugar in the beginning.) Add the flavoring and fold in the well-beaten egg whites. Drop small portions of the mixture on a greased baking sheet and bake in a moderately hot oven (about 375 degrees Fahrenheit). This amount makes about 50 cookies.

Crisp Cookies.

1/2 cupful milk or 1/2 teaspoonful less salt
4 cupfuls sifted soft wheat flour
or 3 1/2 cupfuls sifted hard wheat flour
1 cupful fat (see preceding recipe)

Combine the ingredients in the same way as for drop cookies. Roll the dough thin, handling it no more than necessary, cut it in any desired shapes, and bake the cookies on a greased baking sheet in a fairly hot oven (about 375 to 400 degrees Fahrenheit). Instead of rolling out the dough it may be chilled and sliced thinly. Whether rolled or sliced, chilling the dough makes it easier to handle. This amount makes about 100 thin cookies.

Children love plain cookies cut in fancy shapes, and if one makes cookies often, it may pay to have a number of animal or other interesting cutters on hand. They are made of tin and are relatively inexpensive.

How to Resize Rug and Stop It From Curling

Resizing adds to the durability of the rug and makes it look much better. It can be done at home or by a carpet dealer, says the United States Department of Agriculture.

The rug should be stretched tight and true and tacked at frequent intervals, face down, on a floor or some other flat surface where it can remain undisturbed. It should then be sprinkled generously with a solution made by soaking and dissolving one-fourth pound of flake glue in one-half gallon of water in a double boiler or a container surrounded by hot water. The rug should be allowed to dry for at least 24 hours. If it is light weight, care should be taken not to put on so much glue that it penetrates to the right side.

Can't Always Find Market for Wisdom

"Learning is a drug on the market nowadays," said President Sumner of Talladega college.

"A fairy," he went on, "appeared to a young mother in a vision and said:

"I offer your child wealth and wisdom. Which gift do you choose for him?"

"Wisdom, of course," the young mother answered. "With wisdom you can obtain wealth, but wealth will never give you wisdom."

"The fairy vanished. The boy grew up. He was so wise and learned that his treatises on philosophy, biology, mathematics, history, art, literature and science were translated into ten languages, and by the time he was fifty he occupied the most important chair in one of our most important universities. Nevertheless, in order to get the wherewithal to attend an educational conference in Switzerland last summer he was glad to undertake the correction of the orthographical, grammatical and other errors in a movie magnate's memoirs at the modest rate of 25 cents an hour."

Great Conceit

Gen. Sir Frederick Maurice told at Westminster a story about a snobbish and conceited nobleman.

"When Mrs. Langtry," he said, "was in the full flower of her beauty and popularity, she found the nobleman at her side one evening at a dinner party."

"Why, Lord Dash!" she said. "This is the third time we've met today."

"Yess," drawled the nobleman. "This seems—aw—to be your lucky day."

Head Coach Lou Young of the University of Pennsylvania was talking about a certain football player.

"He reminds me of a story," said Mr. Young. "It's a story about a farmer's wife who bragged at the sewing circle that her son now played on his college football team."

"What's he play?" a second farmer's wife asked.

"'Brawback," said his mother proudly.

COSTLY CLUBHOUSE

PLANNED FOR OCEAN FRONT

AT PACIFIC BEACH

Architect William Wheeler announces that plans are being drawn for a clubhouse at Pacific Beach to be known as the "San Diego Beach Club" and to cost over a quarter of a million dollars, with all of the latest features of modern recreational institutions. The new San Diego Beach club, as it will be known, is announced to occupy an entire block facing the ocean just south of the proposed Pickering pleasure pier. The property for the new club was purchased from the Nettleship company by J. C. Mathews and associates. Construction of the first unit is to commence this morning, according to Mr. Mathews, and construction of the various buildings will follow immediately.

"Mr. Mathews states: 'We launch the San Diego Beach club to fill a long-felt need for an exclusive beach club. The need is greater every day. Our plans embrace a woman's department as well as a men's, a place where women may hold their teas and dances as well as enjoy the beach and plunge.'

The record month of the year was August, when 6283 books went out in one month. The December circulation naturally is lower because of the Christmas rush, but nevertheless 5082 books circulated.

ELECTRICAL DEVICE

FOR OPENING AND CLOSING.

GARAGE DOORS

Electricity now enables the automobilist to drive out of his garage and close the doors behind him without leaving the driver's seat of his car. It also makes it possible, upon his return, to throw these garage doors open and drive in without climbing out of his automobile.

The electrical device that makes this possible consists of two plates set in the concrete pavement where the car will roll over them a few feet from the garage doors. One is inside the garage and the other out of doors. When the car is driven on one of these plates its weight depresses the plate and moves a switch which completes the electrical circuit. The garage doors either slide open or closed as desired.

Thus the plate on the floor of the garage controls the doors from within and the plate outside controls them when the car has left or is approaching the garage. This new device is particularly convenient in rainy weather and is especially helpful for women motorists, since it relieves them of straining and tugging at the garage doors.

GOLDEN RULE AND WORLD PEACE

By DR. S. PARKES CADMAN
President of the Federal Council of Churches

In this powerful appeal for the adoption of the Golden Rule as a guiding principle in international relations, the great radio preacher holds up as an example in constructive international charity the work of the Near East Relief, which makes its annual appeal for the support of the American people on Golden Rule Sunday, observed annually in December.

NOTHING in the history of the American people of recent years so becomes them as their attitude towards the unhappy and persecuted people who have been the beneficiaries of the great work of the Near East Relief. At this season when the annual appeal for the support of this work is made, through the observance of Golden Rule Sunday, it is an overwhelmingly gratifying thing to hear the reports of the triumph and success of this philanthropy. I have been hearing of the horrors of the Near East from the days of my cal promises have not always been realized, at any rate we have tried to retain the credit of our people by contributing generously to this work, which we must continue to sustain.

As a churchman, I may be permitted to point out that the Near East Relief has contributed enormously to the cause of church unity. At Stockholm a few weeks ago I had the privilege of conferring with all the patriarchs and metropolitans and archbishops of the Greek church. They assured me that they have been drawn toward the West not by the common early youth, when Mr. Gladstone conducted his memorable campaign in which he denounced the Turk and urged that the Turks should be thrust bag and baggage out of their country. The horrors have continued ever since, but our country has been an instrument in alleviating them by contributions out of its abundance to the crucial need of the distressed orphans and what few unhappy relatives they have left to them.

We can do no better thing than to give for those who are in need, and thus make such merchandise out of our material welfare as to have credentials for the life which is to come. I do not take the attitude that there is anything much to praise about the American people in this matter, though I am proud of them, as we all are. It would have been a strange thing if we had not done as we have done.

When you think of the millions which are squandered in this country upon feminine devices for beautifying—which do not always succeed in realizing their object—when you think of the vast cost of trying to make mutton look like lamb, when you think of the multitude of surplus things with which we surround ourselves in daily life, and then see this work for far-off children, I think you will agree with me that even though our politiconsent of intellectual minds nor by the doctors of the church, but rather through the work of Near East Relief. That work has won the hearts of great bishops as well as refugees and politicians. Truly we have seen the truth of the saying that a little child shall lead them. The little Armenian orphan, Zadi, whom thousands have heard sing and talk at the preliminary Golden Rule dinners in a hundred cities of this country, is a five-year-old representation of thousands of these Eastern peoples, whom we have approached not with theology or dogma, but with those deeds of mercy which are the very essence of true religion.

There is a lesson of world peace in this philanthropic approach to the hearts of men. We must follow it up with this decision—that we will not allow the state in the future to dictate to the church or to any body of men as to what shall be their attitude toward peace and war. We must take our patriotism from the preaching of the prophets. Unless we want a fund like this every fifty years to repair the recurrent waves of slaughter and devastation, we must cling to the spirit of the Golden Rule. The quality of mercy is not strained. It drippeth as the gentle rain from heaven. It blesseth him that gives and him that takes. It becomes the throned monarch better than his crown.

"FLAPPERHOOD"

Editor "The Beach News":

I met a new attitude toward the old flapper outrage question a few days ago. A young married woman was explaining her name to me; Mardella, I believe it was.

"And I went all through flapperhood with that," she said. Her tone implied that the name had been a burden to bear at that period of development. I could understand her squirming under it. I have an odd one myself. Its very oddness has opened dozens of awkward conversations for me. But the new thought I got from her was contained in that word "flapperhood."

Look about you now and see the flappers of four years ago. If they were of the right stuff, they are leading useful lives in a decent, democratic way. If they weren't of the right stuff, you'll find them pleasing themselves according to their tastes. Change has been wrought in the girls. The old folks raved: "Look at them, their hair, their clothes, the awful way they act!" Now even they can see—the flapper is a stage of development, and "flapperhood" a phase, to be ignored or endured.

ZeZ Confrey Mixes Salads and Songs of a certain young feline frisking over the ivories has been recognized as the model of American syncopation. But Mr. Confrey has other "firsts" in his repertoire, his acquaintances declare. Country bred, he is a judge of horse flesh, and also knows a good cigar.

The simple life is Mr. Confrey's idea of happiness. Every so often Manhattan gets too crowded for him and he boards a train for the country and the companionship of a certain murmuring brook. Inevitably he comes back with one of the merry tunes for which he is noted.

A bachelor, ZeZ keeps open house for his friends. If he invites a few of the boys over for a midnight supper, he does the cooking himself. Invitations to his lively little dinners are sought after. There are two dishes to which Mr. Confrey is partial. So are his friends. His recipes for the two follow:

Royal Eggs With Mushroom Sauce.
12 eggs
Salt
Pepper
1-3 pound mushrooms
1 slice pimento
2 tbsp. butter
12 slices toast
1 1/2 cup evaporated milk
1 cup meat stock
1 1/2 cup meat stock
(This may be prepared from bouillon cubes)
2 tsp. flour
Parsley

Saute the mushrooms in two tbsp. butter, taking care not to burn; make a white sauce of two tbsp. butter, flour, evaporated milk and meat stock. Cook five minutes. Add the cooked mushrooms and chopped pimento. Break eggs and drop into hot fat, being careful to keep egg in a globular mass just as soon as they are a golden brown lift out and drain. Place an egg on each piece of toast. Allow two pieces for each serving. Pour over all the mushroom sauce and garnish with parsley.

Pineapple-Cheese Salad.
10 slices pineapple
1 cup cream
1 cup cheese
4 cup chopped nuts
2 tbsp. evaporated milk
Crisp lettuce leaves
1 tsp. pineapple juice
1 tsp. sugar
Green and red mangoes
Creamy salad dressing

Combine the cheese, nuts, evaporated milk, pineapple juice and sugar, and blend into a smooth mass. Cut pineapple circles in half. Spread cheese mixture on a slice of pineapple and press the other half circle of pineapple on top of cheese as one would a slice of bread in making a sandwich. Cut diamonds or triangles from green and red mangoes and press into the edge of the cheese mixture between the pineapple. Lay two of the prepared pieces of pineapple on a crisp lettuce leaf. Serve with creamy salad dressing. This serves five.
